

International Society of Nurses in Genetics

ISONG is honored and delighted to introduce you to our organization!

The International Society of Nurses in Genetics (ISONG) is a global specialty nursing organization dedicated to genomic healthcare, education, research, and scholarship. ISONG is known globally for providing global networking, resources, high quality educational symposia, presentations, and webinars that provide expert information for nurses using and integrating genomics into their practice, education, policy and research.

Our Annual Congress is an exceptional educational and networking opportunity and will take place this November 8-10, 2019 in San Antonio, Texas. Additionally, ISONG features a library of webinars offering cutting edge education with CEU's in a convenient setting.

*This year we are proud to feature two new educational programs: the ISONG Regional Meeting on May 1-2, 2019 and the Pre-Conference Session prior to Congress on November 7, 2019. All sessions have been developed to meet the needs of the growing need for genetics education and for those who are seeking more in-depth research and applications for their practice. These programs will include cutting edge presentations from an introduction to Genomics to a higher level of advanced practice presentations.

Genetics/Genomics has emerged as a key driver in changing the delivery of health care as we move towards more personalized approaches to care and implement precision therapies.

We believe that nurses are well-positioned to work with patients, families and communities to provide support, counselling and care related to genetic and genomic health. Indeed, we envision that Nursing can play a vital role in this evolving area of health.

Genetics touches every specialty and disease. Understanding how genomics related to your nursing focus will enable you to provide better patient care. Please join us in helping to shape the role of nurses in the future delivery of genetic-genomic healthcare.
